Masters Thesis Award Deadline

It's the last month to apply for the GGP Master Thesis Award! Please spread the word and encourage early career researchers to apply. This award aims to reward graduates for outstanding research on family and population dynamics using data from the GGP.

Thesis submission for the award will be accepted until September 1st. For more information and application visit: <https://bit.ly/2EehJi1>.

New GGP Citation Requirements

We have changed the way we would like users to cite the GGP data. Starting from now, the following acknowledgment has to be included in all publication using GGS data (wave 1, and wave 2):

"This paper uses data from the GGS Waves 1, and 2 (DOIs: 10.17026/dans-z5z-xn8g, 10.17026/dans-xm6-a262), see Gauthier, A. H. et al. \(2018\) or visit the GGP website (<https://www.ggp-i.org/>) for methodological details."

If you recently had a paper published, do not worry about changing the way in which data is cited but we would ask all users to adhere to this new citation requirement moving forward. More information about the GGP data are available here: <https://www.ggp-i.org/data>.

Estonian Research Infrastructure Roadmap 2019

This year the Government of Estonia included the GGP in the Estonian National Research Infrastructure Roadmap. This publication includes information about the Estonian Generations and Gender Survey 2020 (GGS2020-EE). The GGS2020-EE provides new longitudinal comparable data for the analysis of fertility, family dynamics, and other demographic variables in Estonia. Find more information about the GGP and get access to the previous GGS data of Estonia and more other countries on our website (<https://www.ggp-i.org/>).
